The King Takes Some Shots of Repulse with His Cine-Camera

Royal Arrival Delayed

Iceberg and Fog Thrills

WITH THE ROYAL LINER, EMPRESS OF AUSTRALIA, STILL 200 MILES SOUTH-WEST OF CAPE RACE, PICKING A CAREFUL WAY IN FOG THROUGH HUGE ICEBERGS AND FLOATING ICEFIELDS, THE PROGRAMME ARRANGED FOR THE WELCOME OF THE KING AND QUEEN AT QUEBEC HAS HAD TO BE ALTERED, SINCE IT IS NOW IMPOSSIBLE FOR THE SHIP TO REACH PORT ON MONDAY.

An official announcement issued on board the liner yesterday stated that the King and Queen would not land before Tuesday. Mr. Mackenzie King, the Canadian Prime Minister, announced in the Canadian House of Commons that the programme of Monday in Quebec would now be carried out on Tuesday. Other plans have also been revised.

The cruisers, hearing the three blasts of the ship's siren, signalling "I am going astern," made way as the royal liner backed out of harm's way.

The King and Queen came up on to the promenade deck to watch. They had rings around their shoulders.

The Empress of Australia, now clear of the iceberg, slowly moved forward again.

LINER BACKS OUT

A few minutes later the siren was sounding its three warning blasts, and again the liner backed.

As the ship moved ahead a second time, a slight rift in the fog revealed a whole field of ice on the starboard side. Within half an hour conditions had improved sufficiently to enable the ship to resume its voyage at four knots.

REPULSE MEN INJURED

The battle-cruiser Repulse, which escorted the royal liner halfway across the Atlantic, arrived at Plymouth yesterday with mails, including letters from the King and Queen to the Princesses.

Details were given yesterday of injuries to six men on board Repulse after she had left the Empress of Australia on Tuesday.

Experts Predict Jobs for Hundreds of Thousands More Britons

BIGGEST BOOM FOR YEARS IS ON ITS WAY

BY OUR INDUSTRIAL CORRESPONDENT

BRITISH INDUSTRY IS HEADING FOR A BOOM. IN FACTORIES, WORKSHOPS AND SHIPYARDS, IN THE MINES AND ON THE LAND, JOBS WILL BE FOUND SOON FOR HUNDREDS OF THOUSANDS OF UNEMPLOYED MEN AND WOMEN.

That is the verdict of eminent economists who, at the request of the Cabinet, have been investigating the industrial situation.

How long the boom will last depends on several factors. But it will be in full swing by the end of the summer.

In the past three months 400,000 people have found work and signed off at the Labour Exchanges. When the employment figures for May are issued, they will probably show that another 100,000 men and women have got jobs.

The unemployment total is expected to show a monthly decrease of 100,000 as the summer progresses.

The armament industries and the civil industries are busier. Three shifts a day are being worked in many factories and mills.

BUILDING CAMPS

Here are some of the factors that will bring the unemployment total down:

200,000 men during the year will be withdrawn from industry for six months to serve as militiamen.

200,000 men will build camps for the militiamen and for people who would be evacuated from the towns in an emergency.

100,000 more men will start in the next week or two on the manufacture and installation of steel shelters.

50,000 men and women will work full time for months on the £4,000,000 Army clothing orders that have been placed in Lancashire and Yorkshire.

50,000 more men will be taken on in the aircraft industry as new shadow factories come into operation.

In addition, more arsenals and aircraft factories are to be built. Two, in Scotland, will take 10,000 men. Another, near Cambridge, will take 5,000 men.

30 AERODROMES

Work is being speeded up on thirty new aerodromes.

Iron and steel output has touched the highest point on record, and will be maintained for months at over 1,000,000 tons of steel a month and 650,000 tons of pig iron.

This will lead to a greatly increased demand for coal.

As a result of the shipbuilding subsidy every shipyard in the country will be working full time within the next few months.

Agriculture will thrive, too. Hundreds of thousands of acres will be ploughed up for the subsidy of £2 an acre.

The wages that are being paid to the additional people in employment are creating an increased demand for the products of ordinary civilian industries.

Industries producing clothing, boots, motor cars, bicycles and foodstuffs are all benefiting. So are the travel industries. The building of private houses has also speeded up after several months' slackness.

ARMED GUARD ON NAVY DOCKS

SPECIAL TO "THE PEOPLE"

ARMED Royal Marine Police who guard the Royal dockyards can now be seen on duty at some naval ports. Normally these men are unarmed, but they now wear revolvers in holsters, and civilians entering or leaving the yards have to pass closer scrutiny. Cars—even those of officers—are also stopped and carefully inspected.

The decision to arm the police was made some time ago when the naval authorities received what purported to be a threatening letter from the I.R.A.

It appears that the letter indicated that an attempt would be made to cause fires and explosions at Portsmouth dockyard, but although the possibility of a hoax was not ignored, safety-first measures were adopted.

A close watch is also being kept for foreign agents, and dockyard workers as well as officers and men are being urged on no account to take out of the yard photographic drawings or written or printed information which might be of value to a hostile Power.

ENGLAND AND ITALY DRAW

The International football match at Milan yesterday between England and Italy provided an excellent game and ended in a draw at two goals each.

There was a "gate" of 75,000. Both sides played good football. Italy were leading up to seven minutes from the end. England then made a great recovery.

The game is fully reported in Page

More I.R.A. Bomb Outrages

In London Last Night

Explosions Stampede Street Crowds

SPECIAL TO "THE PEOPLE"

BOMBERS, BELIEVED TO BE MEMBERS OF THE I.R.A., WERE BUSY AGAIN IN LONDON LAST NIGHT, AND, AT THREE CROWDED CENTRES, SHOPPERS AND TUBE PASSENGERS HAD NARROW ESCAPES.

Explosions at widely separated points occurred almost simultaneously, but no one was injured.

Marble Arch was the scene of the first bomb outrage reported to the police.

There, 30 men were in a public convenience when bombs went off.

They had been placed in an unoccupied cubicle.

The whole place was wrecked, and the men stampeded as bricks and mortar fell about them.

"The place was full when the bombs exploded," said George Anderson, of Ladbroke-grove, "and we were lucky to escape uninjured."

A boy has given the police the description of a man whom he saw behaving suspiciously.

At the time of the explosions hundreds of people were listening to orators near Marble Arch and families were sitting out in the park. Many rushed into the road on the verge of panic.

"It was like a 9.2 shell going off," said one of the by-standers, describing the first explosion.

"Glass was scattered over the pavement, and soon the street was jammed with people."

TERRIFIC REPORT

The second outrage occurred in a subway in Harrow-rd., Edgware-rd.

The street was crowded with shopkeepers at the time.

"The report was terrific," said an employee of G. A. Dunn and Co., Ltd., whose premises are near the scene of the explosion.

Miss Phyllis Jackson, a shop girl, said that hundreds of shoppers were partially deafened by the force of the explosion.

"Women could be heard crying 'Bombs!' in all directions," she added.

"Within a few seconds, however, the police had arrived in dozens, and the subway was closed."

Axis Pact Disclosures

HITLER DREW UP THE TERMS

Paris, Saturday.

THE TERMS OF AN EIGHT-POINT MILITARY AND POLITICAL PACT BETWEEN GERMANY AND ITALY, SAID TO HAVE BEEN PUT FORWARD BY HERR HITLER, ARE REPORTED IN A ROME DISPATCH APPEARING IN TO-MORROW'S ISSUE OF "LE MATIN."

The military section of the proposed pact is said to have been drawn up by Herr Hitler himself.

The period of the pact is stated to be ten years, after which it would be subject to revision. The military articles are given by the correspondent as follows:

(1) In the event of a European conflict, Rome and Berlin will immediately undertake military consultations. The chief persons who would undertake the consultations are said to be mentioned by name in a secret protocol.

(2) The contracting parties will agree to consider their interests as inextricably bound together.

(3) The contracting parties will bind themselves to lay down their arms only simultaneously and after agreement.

ADDED POINTS

The political section of the alleged pact would set forth the principles on which it is based the Rome-Berlin axis. But Germany is said to have added two supplementary points:

1. The contracting parties will agree mutually to respect each other's friendly relations with third Powers, where these have been determined by well-defined treaties or ententes.

2. The contracting parties will agree not to negotiate or sign any new agreement of any kind without previous consultations between Rome and Berlin.

Forged Irish Sweep Tickets

British Victims Of Widespread Ramp In Paris Cafes

SPECIAL TO "THE PEOPLE"

TRAFFIC IN FORGED IRISH SWEEPSTAKE TICKETS ON AN ENORMOUS SCALE HAS BEEN BROUGHT TO LIGHT BY POLICE INVESTIGATIONS AT CAFES AND BARS IN PARIS FREQUENTED BY BRITISH, AMERICAN AND OTHER OVERSEAS VISITORS.

Special police were detailed to investigate reports that Irish Sweep tickets, the sale of which is entirely forbidden in France, were obtainable at these cafés. They were astonished to find that the tickets were forgeries. Subsequent inquiries left the police aghast at the extent of the traffic.

Touts pushing the sale of tickets have been found all over Paris and on the south coast. Even French people have fallen for the "ramp."

What puzzles the police principally is the origin of the forged tickets. It seems clear that they are manufactured in London, but the problem is to discover the manner in which they are imported into France.

Regulations at the ports have been tightened up to such an extent in recent years that the police are positive such a vast quantity of forged tickets could not be smuggled in through the ordinary ports.

TOUTS QUESTIONED

They are therefore forced to fall back on the theory that there is a clandestine transport organisation which collects the tickets in bulk somewhere in England and brings them into France by roundabout means.

More than sixty touts have been taken to police headquarters and put through a "grilling" questioning in the hope of forcing from them admissions that would put the police on the track of the source of supply.

Apart from a letter from London signed only by initials, urging greater caution on the man who appears to have been the chief salesman, the police have no clue to the persons at the head of the gang responsible for the production of the forgeries.

Suspicion has, however, fallen on a debonair London Irishman who has already come under police notice in Paris for similar traffic some time ago.

Honey Of A Hold-up

A SWARM OF 20,000 BEES TOOK POSSESSION OF CHURCH-ROW, HAMPSTEAD, N.W., YESTERDAY.

For time the air was thick with them and pedestrians could not get past, but finally the bees settled on a bough of a pear tree, overhanging a wall near the parish church.

The weight of the swarm was so great that the bough was weighed down almost to breaking point.

An expert sawed off the branch, located the queen and put her in a box. The rest of the swarm followed at once.

Publisher Seized By Nazis

GAGGED and TOLD TO STOP BOOK

Bakersfield, Cal., Saturday.

FAMOUS AMERICAN PUBLISHER, MR. GEORGE PUTNAM, WAS FOUND BOUND AND GAGGED IN A VACANT HOUSE AT BAKERSFIELD, 100 MILES FROM HOLLYWOOD, TO-DAY.

He told the police that he was kidnapped from his Hollywood home overnight by two men who spoke to each other in German.

They appeared to be talking about an anti-Nazi book he had published entitled "The Man Who Killed Hitler."

Some time ago he received three letters threatening him with death unless he ceased publishing the book.

With one letter, which concluded: "Germany defies the world," was a bullet-riddled copy of the book.

The two men, Mr. Putnam said after his release to-day, attacked him when he went to his garage, threw him into his own car and drove off.

He was discovered when people living near the partly built house in Bakersfield heard cries for help. They found him with his arms and legs tightly bound with tape from a motor-car tire. A gag made of similar tape was hanging loose round his mouth as it had worked free.

Mr. Putnam is widower of the famous American aviator, Amelia Earhart, who disappeared while flying the Pacific Ocean in 1937.

It was reported earlier to-day from Los Angeles that he is to marry Mrs. Jean Marie Cresigny James.—B.U.P.

Bank Account Mystery

SEARCH FOR A RED-HAIRED GIRL

SPECIAL TO "THE PEOPLE"

A BEAUTIFUL YOUNG WOMAN WITH COPPER-COLOURED HAIR, SAID TO HAVE FLED FROM ENGLAND, IS BEING SOUGHT BY THE PARIS POLICE, WHO BELIEVE THAT SHE KNOWS SOMETHING ABOUT A MYSTERY ACCOUNT WHICH HAS BEEN IMPOUNDED IN THE PARIS BRANCH OF A LONDON BANK.

A few days ago she landed at Dieppe from a cross-Channel boat and hurried aboard the Paris train.

After the train had left Dieppe, a police official who was travelling on it received a message, sent by radio, that the girl with copper hair must be detained.

But she could not be found.

It is believed that, after joining the train, she changed into man's clothing and covered her tell-tale locks with a wig.

LIST OF NAMES

I learn that she is linked up with another affair, about which the police are even more reticent.

Special officers of the Sureté Nationale, examining a safe in the Paris branch of a London bank, found inside it cash, securities and a document which contained a number of names.

The account was of German origin. It appeared to have been used by a Gestapo agent in Britain and that an Irishman living in Paris, but that with the I.R.A., had received many payments from it.

There is little doubt that the money was used to finance terrorist activities in England and that the copper-haired girl was one of his most active lieutenants.

The Irishman has also vanished.

AND TITLES, TOO, AT A FAT PRICE

EXCLUSIVE TO "THE PEOPLE"

IF A HARD-UP EUROPEAN NOBLEMAN WANTS A WEALTHY BRIDE, OR, INVERSELY, IF A RICH, SELF-MADE MAN AND "SOCIAL CLIMBER" DESIRES TO MARRY A TITLED WOMAN, THERE IS A "SALESMAN" WHO IS READY TO PROVIDE THESE REQUIREMENTS FOR COMMISSION TERMS.

He is an Irish American who has recently arrived in Europe from the States, and he tersely describes himself as "the world's best commercial traveller." He certainly has an original and—according to himself—a profitable "line."

He never books a passage or signs a hotel register in his real name because he fears that he would be bothered by would-be clients who would not be worth his time. His real name is reserved for genuine clients.

He boasts that he never handles an affair unless he is sure of making at least £20,000 commission. This is based on the wealth of the client who happens to possess the money, a point on which he is well informed before he will even consider a "deal."

"I guess it's as good a way of earning the dough as any other, and there's plenty of fun in the game," he drawled in the lounge of the hotel where he was drawing up his plan of campaign for the London season.

He produced a little book with a number of names—women apart from the men—and, against each name, appeared a marginal note regarding financial position and requirements.

SATISFIED CLIENTS

"Watch the marriage notices in the papers from now until the autumn," he said, "and if you don't find some of these names figuring you can say I don't know what I am talking about."

This is his first visit to England, though he has made many trips to France and other Continental countries and arranged many profitable unions.

He showed the writer letters of thanks he had received from satisfied clients.

"I already have a list of couples I am sure to place," he added, "and I shall be a disappointed man if I don't finish this trip at least £200,000 to the good."

Only once has he been deceived over a client's financial position. That was when he arranged the marriage of a far from prepossessing American girl of reputed wealth to a French Count belonging to a historic family.

When the Count found that the girl's fortune was not up to promise he began proceedings against the world's best salesman, but his family intervened and the action was withdrawn for fear of scandal.

The account was of German origin. It appeared to have been used by a Gestapo agent in Britain and that an Irishman living in Paris, but that with the I.R.A., had received many payments from it.

There is little doubt that the money was used to finance terrorist activities in England and that the copper-haired girl was one of his most active lieutenants.

The Irishman has also vanished.

HUSBANDS and wives yesterday:—

Husband: I warned my wife that unless her mother came to live nearer London I could no longer afford the telephone.

Wife: My husband used to think he was tough, but he could never eat his dinner without a fuss.

Husband: I've always treated my wife with the utmost respect. I even wore the pullovers she knitted for me.

Wife: What is my husband's occupation? Well, sir, he puts down "French Polisher" whenever he has to sign anything on the dotted line.

Husband: I've not neglected my wife. I've been to see her several times and now and then I drop her half a crown.

Appeal to Girl to Leave Crook

"I HAVE BEEN VERY HAPPY"

—HER REPLY

A N APPEAL TO AN ATTRACTIVE GIRL OF EIGHTEEN TO GIVE UP HER LOVER, A MAN OF TWENTY-SEVEN WITH A CRIMINAL RECORD, WAS MADE AT MARYLEBONE POLICE COURT YESTERDAY.

"Are you prepared to give him up now?" she was asked when the man's past was revealed to her.

"It depends. I have been very happy with him," she replied, her lips quivering.

The man, James Patterson, alias Henri D'Artangan, alias James Evans, was accused of stealing valuable books and other articles from the house of his former employer, Dr. H. Ward Hales, of Upper Brook-st., W., and of making a false statement to a detective officer while he was making inquiries under the Aliens Order.

The girl, Mary Frances Wood, waitress, was accused of stealing a home and contents from Glenlock-rd., Hampstead, where she had lived.

Tears were streaming down her cheeks as the girl left the court.

Her lover, Patterson, was then brought in and Detective-Sgt. Griffin said that he had been sentenced for shoplifting and theft, the last sentence being six months in Dublin, in 1935, for receiving. He had been in trouble on nine occasions.

The magistrate said that Patterson's most serious offence was his association with the girl.

She then met Patterson, gave up her work, and went to live with him at Orman-rd., Hampstead, where, as Mr.

and Mrs. D'Artangan, they became employed.

The magistrate said he understood that friends in Canada were prepared to receive her and give her a fresh start if she would go.

The girl then said that she would prefer to stay with her mother in England.

The magistrate, on hearing that she could go to a convent for a period, placed her on probation for two years with a condition that she should reside where directed.

The girl was streaming down her cheeks as the girl left the court.

Her lover, Patterson, was then brought in and Detective-Sgt. Griffin said that he had been sentenced for shoplifting and theft, the last sentence being six months in Dublin, in 1935, for receiving.

He had been in trouble on nine occasions.

The magistrate said that Patterson's most serious offence was his association with the girl.

He was sentenced to six months' imprisonment.

Titled Man Who Was Jailed

FIGURED IN SCANDALS OF THE NINETIES

SPECIAL TO "THE PEOPLE"

SCANDALS THAT STARTLED VICTORIAN SOCIETY ARE RECALLED BY THE DEATH, ANNOUNCED YESTERDAY, OF LORD WILLIAM NEVILL.

Unable to keep up with the riotous extravagance of his friends of the gay 'nineties, Lord William obtained money by false pretences and was sent to prison for five years.

Nine years later he was involved in a greater scandal—the "Black Diamonds" case.

Son of the first Marquis of Abercavenny and uncle of the present Marquis, he was first convicted of obtaining money by false pretences in 1898.

SIGNED UNREAD PAPERS

The late Lieutenant Spender-Clay, of the Guards, was asked by Lord William whether he would sign documents concerning power of attorney.

Having just become twenty-one, he did so, though he did not read the documents.

Later it turned out that the young man had put his signature to money-lenders' promissory notes for £11,113 18s.

Later the moneylenders took action against the lieutenant for the return of the money.

Criminal proceedings against Lord William Nevill followed and, after being charged with forgery and fraud, he was sent to jail for five years for obtaining the money by false pretences.

BORROWED £80,000

It was stated during the trial that the young peer had borrowed about £80,000 from different firms.

Lieutenant Spender-Clay was M.P. for Tonbridge at the time of his death two years ago.

Thirty years ago, Lord William was involved in an even more startling case and was sentenced to a year's imprisonment.

He was charged with stealing or feloniously receiving a diamond and emerald ring, a pearl necklace, two diamond and sapphire rings, a diamond half-hoop ring, a diamond necklace, a diamond pendant, and a valuable diamond and pearl ornament, the property of a London pawnbroker.

Shortly after pledging these jewels he asked the pawnbroker to call with them and enter into a different type of contract.

When the two men met, Lord William asked that the jeweller should be sealed in a box. This was done, the pawnbroker leaving with the box.

Shortly afterwards one of the partners in the pawnbroking firm died, and an inventory was taken of all the goods held by the company.

The sealed box was opened. It contained two lumps of coal.

Lord William had substituted the box containing the jewels and had given his partner another one which held "black diamonds."

Subsequently it was discovered that he had pledged the jewellery elsewhere, though later redeeming them.

After he had been committed for trial, Lord William repaid the money he owed the firm. But the prosecution could not be withdrawn, and he was sentenced to a year's imprisonment for larceny.

When he was released he lived quietly and little was heard of him until his death.

QUEEN'S NEPHEW FINED

The Hon. John Patrick Bowes-Lyon, aged twenty-nine, eldest son of Lord Glamis, and nephew of the Queen, of Shovestroke Manor, East Grinstead, Sussex, was fined £2 at High Wycombe police court yesterday for exceeding the speed limit on the main London-Oxford road at High Wycombe.

It was stated that he drove at between 50 and 60 m.p.h.

"Whatever will become of us?
Jim's not the man he used to be"

IS IT TRUE YOU ARE LOSING YOUR GRIP?

HAVE you an uneasy feeling you're on the down grade—not the man you used to be? Do you feel sleepy in the afternoons—too slack to enjoy your evenings? Is it too much "fag" to play with the children when you get home? Can you feel your wife fretting about you—even though she never says a word? Are your friends talking—thinking you're a failure?

What is the matter? Why do you feel flat and listless so often? How is it you don't seem able to concentrate, that you're so easily irritated—always off your food—scarcely ever quite free from aches and pains?

It can't be your age. Many men older than you are full of "go"—using their experience and wisdom to make sure of a place in the sun. Is there something they've got that you haven't? Can you get back your health and happiness?

Doctors say "Yes"!

A group of doctors have been making a special study of hundreds of cases just like yours. These doctors know your condition is due to "ageing" poisons seeping into the system from your colon day and night, hour by hour, just like the poisons from a decayed tooth.

Your colon is a large tube below the small intestine—a waiting-room where the body's waste matter collects after passing through forty feet of bowel. This waste matter should always be moist and slippery so that it can slide out of the colon and be expelled completely at least once every day.

But as you get older, the colon fails to retain sufficient fluid to keep its contents moist and soft. Parts of the collecting waste matter become dry and form crusts on the colon wall so that it becomes "furred up" like a water-pipe or kettle.

This stagnant waste matter decays and spreads poisons into every part of the system. You get aches and twinges in your back and limbs. You puff on stairs. You sleep badly. You lose your appetite again. You feel constantly tired, "flat," fit for nothing.

How to Correct "Furred Colon"

After 9 months' work, doctors have just completed over 1,400 clinical experiments on men and women volunteer patients. They found that 1.2 grammes of Kruschen Salts (just enough to cover a sixpence) taken first thing every morning retains just the right amount of moistening fluid in the colon to prevent the formation of poison-breeding crusts (furred colon), and to keep the colon sweet and clean.

"We found," reported the doctors, "that, unlike other preparations in common use, the small daily dose of Kruschen did not irritate the stomach or small intestine. It did not flush out valuable nutrient along with the waste matter nor did it weaken the system or form the slightest harmful habit. We consider this is one of the most important investigations we have made and that the small daily dose of Kruschen is the most satisfactory aid to colonic cleanliness known to science."

These tests confirm what millions of happy

Kruschen users already know—that this simple daily health rule keeps them young in mind and body, whatever their age.

You can benefit, too

Start tomorrow taking a pinch of Kruschen in your early morning tea or warm water. You will begin to benefit inside a week. Within a month you will hardly know yourself. As the rich red blood surges through your veins free of poisons, you'll feel a health, power and confidence you haven't known for years. You'll look younger—feel younger. And you'll keep that youthful "Kruschen Feeling" as long as you continue your "little daily dose."

Don't delay. Your chemist has Kruschen. The 1/9 bottle lasts three months. Smaller sizes for as little as 6d. and 1/- Start taking your "little daily dose" tomorrow morning. Keep youthful for a farthing a day.

Now They're Calling-Up Cupid For The Army!

VICAR OUTLIVES HIS DOCTORS

FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT

SIXTY YEARS AGO THE REV. FREDERICK WILLETT WAS ADVISED TO RESIGN HIS LIVING OF WEST BROMWICH BECAUSE OF ILL-HEALTH.

The doctors who feared for Mr. Willett's health are long since buried. Their sons are now middle-aged with grown-up children. But, on the outskirts of this pleasant town, their patient still lives on.

To-day, a hale and hearty hundred-and-one, he is Britain's oldest clergyman.

In Victorian times Mr. Willett was known as the "publican vicar." He inherited a large estate near here, on which was a public-house, the "Anchor."

Mr. Willett installed a manager, but made one reservation: only a certain amount of drink was to be served to each customer.

For a while the "Anchor Inn" prospered. Then a gang of labourers, thirsty after a hard day's work, called for huge quantities of beer.

The manager refused to supply them and that ended the vicar's career as a publican. The labourers saw "red" and all but wrecked the "Anchor Inn."

ANNUAL GIFTS TO POOR ON TOMBSTONE

Among the bequests of Mr. Ralph Douglas Smith, of Belmore-nd, Eastbourne, was £10 a year to the Vicar of Ditchling, Sussex, for 10 poor and needy people.

He stipulated that the gifts are to be paid at his tomb in Ditchling churchyard on the anniversary of his death, after a Sunday morning service.

The Vicar is to be paid £1 for distributing the money. Mr. Smith's total estate was £17,247.

MOTORING NEWS

French Wives For "Tommies"

SPECIAL TO "THE PEOPLE"

EVEN CUPID IS TO BE "CALLED UP" NOW AS THE RESULT OF A DECISION BY BRITISH AND FRENCH MILITARY CHIEFS IN RECENT STAFF TALKS.

They have agreed that an essential part of British Army training must be annual manoeuvres on French soil.

Following reports of this decision, a number of influential people in France have just formed an association which will aim at bringing the "Tommies" into direct contact with French families in the hope of promoting marriages.

It is claimed that this plan may serve the double purpose of arresting France's birth decline—in the event of the couple eventually taking up residence in France and becoming virtually French citizens—and at the same time result in a closer bond between the two countries.

The President of the French Republic has expressed his sympathy with the idea, and it is believed that the State will assist the association in finding centres near the area of the annual manoeuvres where "Tommies" can meet French girls of the more serious type.

WELCOMES WAITING

British soldiers leaving for the annual manoeuvres will be furnished with the names and addresses of French families where they can count on being welcomed.

They will also be given free tickets of membership of the association, which will be known as the Franco-British Social Fellowship.

Care will be taken to ensure that only French girls of the highest character are admitted to membership, and commanding officers of British units will be asked to see that membership tickets are only given to non-married soldiers of good repute.

The Association will establish a fund out of which dowries will be provided for approved French girls contracting marriages with "Tommies"

"PEOPLE" AID FOR WIDOWED MOTHER OF 7

INDESCRIBABLE IS THE BLOW TO A LARGE FAMILY WHEN THROUGH A SUDDEN AND TRAGIC ACCIDENT IT LOSES THE BREADWINNER.

Such is the experience of Mrs. Smiley, of 8, Church-st, Port Glasgow, Renfrewshire, who is left a widow with her seven children all under fifteen years of age.

Her husband was killed while driving a tractor.

In her loss, and faced with a future of uncertainty in which alone she must fend for her family, there is one thing that has come to lighten Mrs. Smiley's burden.

It is the cheque for £60 which "The People," under its great Free Family Insurance scheme has promptly sent to her.

As her husband was a registered reader, "The People" acted promptly in sending her this cheque. This is the benefit provided by "The People" Free Insurance for fatal accidents at work, including a special benefit of £5 for each surviving child under the age of fifteen.

FIRST news of the 1940 models—the complete Triumph range, managing director Maurice Newham tells me, is to be continued without change in models or prices.

The recently introduced "12" is priced at £285, and the Dolomite models range from £212 to £450 for the smart roadster coupe.

Mr. Newham says: "I believe this definite statement of stabilised policy will be appreciated by motorists who owing to the troubled times, which now appear to show signs of settling down have deferred placing orders for new cars, but who wish to do so providing they have some assurance as to what the position will be when new models are announced."

This payment of £60 is only one of 171 cheques amounting to £653 which have been distributed to registered readers or their dependents during the past week.

FATAL ACCIDENTS AT WORK

Under this heading £285 has been distributed among the dependents of the following victims:

Mr. F. J. Finney, 12, Dragon-lane, Newbold Verdon, Leicester; Mr. H. Godwin, 10, Croft-st, Ipswich; Mr. A. Whitcroft, 34, Barrow-on-Soar; Mr. W. Lawrence, 20, Barnwood, Silverstone; Mr. T. LIFE'S LITTLE PROBLEMS

GREED ISN'T FAIR TO YOU

By the

was walking. He had lost his air of prosperity. He told me to apply for a job.

His car and his country home were for sale. The business was in the hands of the Official Receiver.

"It's my own fault," he said ruefully. "If only I had been more easily satisfied I should not be in this position. But I was greedy. I wanted too much."

An old story, one you hear all too often in this world of over-reaching ambitions.

For greediness and discontent walk hand in hand. There can be no happiness or peace of mind for the man who makes a god of gold, whose only aim in life is to increase his store of wealth and possessions. No matter how much he has, the greedy man will always desire more, and as the vice increases its hold so will his better nature slowly be strangled.

Cunning usurps frankness in his heart, envy takes the place of content, he becomes unscrupulous and cruel, ready to go to any lengths to feed his greedy desire. And his reward—a perpetual chase of a will-o'-the-wisp he can never capture!

That's why the greedy folk have my pity. That's why I have told you the story of my unlucky friend. I want the moral to sink home. I want you to make sure that greed has no place in your heart.

The easiest way is to fill it with love and kindness and thoughts for others. Then there will be no room for greed. There never is in a heart that's close to God.

WOOL UNDIES WORN 3 DAYS OR MORE IS A CUSTOM WE DEPLORE

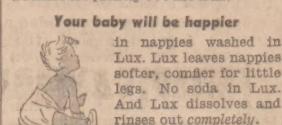

Here's how to wash woolies often without shrinking them

SOME women, who are fastidious in other ways, actually wear their woolies undies for three days or more! It must be because they're afraid to wash wool frequently!

But with Lux, the laziest woolies can be washed frequently without the slightest danger. That's because Lux leaves no bits of undissolved soap behind in the wool. It's the undissolved soap that causes felting, matting, shrinkage.

Be dainty, but play safe. Wash your woolies frequently...use Lux.

Edward Lyndoe's Predictions

AND NOW—WHAT HAPPENS NEXT?

PLAN WITH THE PLANETS

THE PAST FEW DAYS HAVE BROUGHT AMPLE CONFIRMATION THAT YOU HAVE NOT BEEN MISLED BY THIS COLUMN'S PREDICTIONS. HITLER AT AN IMPASSE . . . LITVINOV OUT OF RUSSIA . . . RUSSIA LINING UP WITH BRITAIN AND AMERICA . . . JAPAN SHRINKING FROM EXPECTED SUPPORT OF THAT AXIS.

Next move? In the Mediterranean area, where Italy will be provoking another "crisis" calculated to startle Britain. All bluff. Upshot is that Mussolini will make a big effort to command Spanish Morocco and the Straits, and will eventually "get the bird" from his "friend," Franco. Expect a scare; but don't worry. This is going to be a highly critical week.

You need not worry, because the Duce is about to face supreme difficulties at home. As was indicated here, Germany has begun to pour troops into Italy. Whereby hangs the revolt story you are going to hear in a short time.

WHEN you hear what Mussolini has to say about Spain on the Madrid Victory March Day you need not imagine that I shall have been proved wrong about his losing out there.

He will be eating every word of his "protection" talk (which is what is anticipated) before the year is out.

Answering letters on the subject of Spain, let me point out as positively as possible (a) that the "victory" is not the end of the trouble; (b) that Franco's talk is to be of short duration; (c) that 1940 will see a changed administration. I hope this is specific enough.

Another move expected by me concerns Egypt. As you were told long ago, the Duce is going to make an effort in that direction, but suggestions in my mail that he intends to launch an attack are not confirmed by my charts. Nevertheless, Egypt figures in a first-class sensation connected with the Axis within three or four weeks possibly.

BRIEF BIRTHDAY INDICATIONS

(Applying to those whose anniversaries occur this week.)

TO-DAY

YOU could scarcely wish for a better year than the one beginning to-day. Everything points to a highly successful time in business life leading to some concrete improvement in your general status. Enterprise pays this year.

ANSWERING other correspondents let me dispose once and for all of the idea that Russia will not offer direct aid, military and otherwise, to countries in Eastern Europe.

The U.S.S.R. will make swift moves in this direction; treaties will be completed, and even Bulgaria—now proclaiming her neutrality—will be affected eventually. You can expect some pretty big surprises from this direction. I point especially to Poland and Rumania.

Governmental changes in at least four countries can be prophesied: Rumania, Russia, Japan and Poland. All will have to do with Britain's changed policy; all will bear strongly on the opposition to Germany, and all will be dramatic in their presentation. The democracies appear to me to gain much from these changes.

DUKE, but possibly delayed until the summer months, are grave events in neighbouring countries. In both Holland and Belgium the charts show a progressive drift towards acts of violence—a of political order, and severe crises. These events are coupled with the loss from the scene of some personalities of high rank.

OTHER correspondence reflects anxiety about Poland—and especially in regard to Danzig. This much can be asserted positively: Hitler will not have Axis backing for further adventures in that direction, and the long-expectant rift with Mussolini will this week reach the point where he will have to think twice about anything of any real magnitude.

There will be more moves—but you can bank on their not succeeding in their purpose. This goes for the rest of 1939 . . . and the whole of 1940, if you like! Smash and grab successes reached their end with the recent cessation of certain planetary influences.

Another point which may be of interest is that indications of a distinct change for the better in Polish affairs, and other nations close to her borders are shown for this autumn—probably in late September or October. These indications are suggestive of reduction of current friction.

THE week shows still more improved weather in practically all parts of the British Isles, and I consider it likely that hours of sunshine will reach exceptional figures. I find no marked signs of rainfall anywhere.

IF YOUR BIRTHDAY IS THIS WEEK you can have a specially compiled Month-by-Month Review of your affairs up to the end of May, 1940 (over 3,500 words), by applying AT ONCE together with a P.O. for 2/- to cover clerical and postage costs. State name (Mr., Mrs. or Miss), full postal address, date of birth, and send to Edward Lyndoe, c/o "The People," 93, Long Acre, W.C.2.

TO-MORROW

You must be prepared now for a slow-moving year, in which most of your interests tend to mark time. The chief disadvantages appear in connection with occupational affairs. By way of consolation, I hasten to add that in spite of the snags the general financial position appears to improve.

TUESDAY

Rather a quiet year in which such difficulties as there are appear to be largely of your own making. Steady progress can be expected in most occupational interests. Minor changes can be effected with safety.

WEDNESDAY

Plenty of exciting incidents this year, and you will be hard put to keep pace with the speed with which things move. You need to be on the alert mentally to take advantage of all the opportunities which present themselves. Financial prospects are above the average.

THURSDAY

You, too, have a year full of excitement, although you may find it hard on your poch. This is an admirable time for launching new ventures and making any changes you have in mind. At the same time, you will have to keep a close eye on the financial situation, for there is every indication of strain if you overstep the mark.

FRIDAY

The chief emphasis this year appears to rest on matters of business interest. The financial outlook is highly encouraging, and you can now push your schemes with confidence. There may be a few hitches, possibly due to health strain, but in the main I see very little to interfere with your ambitions.

SATURDAY

You will need to keep your eyes well open this year, for some amazingly good opportunities are likely to present themselves in close conjunction with unusual schemes which almost certainly lead to difficulties. I would advise against placing too much reliance upon others.

SUNDAY

Speculation proves unprofitable, and if not on the alert, you may find yourself dragged into some pretty costly schemes.

IN ACTION

A BEAMING smile of satisfaction spreads slowly over the punch-battered and homely features of that plump clown among pugilists, Tony Galento.

In one huge fist he grasps a hot-dog; in the other a brimming Stein of beer. The waistband of his trousers is unfastened and Tony is beginning to breathe a trifle heavily, for this is his tenth frankfurter and his twelfth beer.

But he sighs contentedly as he drains the tall tankard and loudly calls for yet another!

Celebrating a victory? Not on your life! This is the Orange Fat Boy's idea of passing the time pleasantly on the afternoon before a fight!

Not for Maestro Galento the sober ways of other fighters. Not for him the spartan life.

The globular New Jersey scrapper, who is now busy fattening himself up in readiness for his tilt at Joe Louis' crown in June, thinks nothing of filling himself with hot-dogs a few hours before waddling into the ring to baffle another opponent insensible with those flailing, cast-iron fists.

Tony's fists have never let him down in a fight. He hits with such terrific force—and more often than not with such appalling inaccuracy and lack of science—that any ordinary hands would long ago have cracked up.

Hot Dogs and Beer

But Galento concentrated on strengthening his fists in his early fighting days by pounding them against a brick wall until they were raw and bleeding. As a result they are now so incredibly tough that he could punch his way through a wooden door without harm.

He places all his faith in those hammer fists and his gigantic legs moulded on Grecian column proportions. So long as they remain sound the Orange Nightstick does not care how much fat he accumulates.

Preparing and almost tearful managers, from Jack Dempsey and Maxie Waxman downwards, have vainly tried to break America's fighting clown of his habit of grabbing a snack and a drink at all sorts of odd hours, both in and out of training.

Galento's idea of a snack ranges from a couple of porterhouse steaks and three or four pounds of potatoes to half a dozen plates of spaghetti or a couple of dozen frankfurters and beer.

"I'm a big guy," he says, waving aside the objections of horrified managers. "When I'm hungry I gotta eat. See?"

And eat he does! There's no stopping him. If he gets peckish in his dressing room the night he fights Louis he'll send out for a plate of hamburgers or hot-dogs and a few bottles of beer.

His training methods are just as erratic. If he takes it into his head, Tony will arrive at the gymnasium at eight o'clock in the morning for his workout, and he has been known to turn up full of beer towards midnight and start smashing bags clean from their moorings.

Early in his professional career he bought a second-hand motor-bicycle and did his "roadwork" roaring around the New Jersey countryside on it. Even to-day he will sometimes drive slowly behind his sparring partners in his high-powered car while they plod along the dusty highway in sweaters and old flannels.

Immune to Pain

"Pick 'em up, you mugs," he bellows in high spirits. "I don't want to waste half the day doing my roadwork!"

In spite of these reckless methods Two-Ton Tony still retains his ox-like strength and almost freakish powers of endurance. He soaks up punishment like a sponge and seems absolutely immune to pain.

Charging in with his mouth wide open and his tongue out in a typical Galento grimace during his fight with Jack Shaw in Orange, the Fat Boy stopped a fierce upper cut with his chin.

As his jaws snapped together Tony's tongue was bitten almost in two, but he continued fighting and won the decision.

After the contest he was seen by Dr. Max E. Stern, the sporting medic who has treated suchastic celebrities as Mickey Walker, Young Stribling, Gene Tunney, Primo Carnera and Tex Rickard.

Dr. Stern ordered him to hospital, and in a few hours' time the boxer's

He Spent All His Money, But Wouldn't Give Up

COURAGE that led to FORTUNE

By The
Hon. Hugh D.
McINTOSH

SWELTERING under a bright copper sun, clinging to the edge of a red dust wilderness across which the wind blows oven-hot, Broken Hill, in New South Wales is the nearest approach to hell on earth I know.

For more than a year as a youngster of twelve I worked there. My job was picking ore at the famous silver mines. For eight hours a day I toiled in a blinding, merciless heat, while the sun struck down like a hammer on my unprotected back. My clothes stuck damply to me, and fat black flies buzzed ceaselessly about my head.

I never realised then that years hence I should one day sit down to dine with big and husky George McCulloch, the Scotsman who discovered the fabulously rich Broken Hill mine.

Among the many millionaires I have known, men with that magic £1,000 a week income to spend, I suppose McCulloch and slim, fair-haired, dapper Frank Albert were the most remarkable and strikingly contrasted.

Albert, who started life playing the fiddle on a ferry-boat, and founded his immense fortune by selling cheap mouth-organs to Australian errand-boys, has been my friend since the days when neither of us had a couple of bob to rattle in our pockets; but McCulloch I did not meet until he had become the Silver King.

Then, facing him across the twinkling silver and cut-glass splendour of the dining-table at his magnificent London home, I told him how I, too, had worked on the very ground where he had once toiled and hoped and despised, and at last found fortune.

THE OLD DAYS

For a long moment he stared incredulously, for at that time, if not a millionaire, I was a very wealthy man. Then he smiled.

"Broken Hill!" he said. "It almost broke my heart before it made my fortune."

For the rest of that memorable evening we sat and talked of that barren, fly-infested, outlandish spot from which more than £150,000,000 worth of silver has been taken.

We sat in deep armchairs before a blazing fire in a richly panelled room hung with priceless old masters. But I think for both of us the walls dissolved and we were back in one of Broken Hill's rough corrugated iron-roof shacks.

We had eaten a perfect meal served for rare wines, but we were remembering days when our food was covered with red dust and black flies, when a glass of water was a luxury and a bath something to dream about.

Unless you knew the Broken Hill country as it was in those old days you cannot appreciate the epic quality of George McCulloch's story, the story of a young man arriving there with a few shillings in his pockets and struggling on against almost overwhelming odds.

Even when I worked there and a flourishing mining town had sprung up on the ground where McCulloch stubbed his toe on the first silver nugget, life was still almost unbearable.

Water, carted twenty-five miles from the nearest well, cost eight shillings for a hundred gallons, and was lukewarm, brackish and scarcely fit to drink. The only milk obtainable was goat's milk for no cattle could exist in a land where raindrops and blades of grass were as rare as meat at a vegetarian dinner.

HEAT AND DUST

Dust storms were common. The sky and the sun would be blotted out by flying sand, and after hours of this black nightmare the wind would drop, leaving the whole township half buried under six or seven inches of red dust.

This dust got everywhere. In your eyes, your ears, your hair and your food. You even found it floating in the lukewarm water you poured down your parched and aching throat.

You got used to the big flies that swarmed everywhere. But the heat was something else.

Sometimes the blinding, scorching sun sent you half crazy and you had to jerk your mind back from thoughts of green grass, shady trees and showers of rain for fear that something in your brain would snap.

When George McCulloch first came to Broken Hill there was no town there, not so much as a single shack, nothing but a barren wilderness and the heat and the flies and the dust storms.

Yet here he lived for years with told millions undiscovered beneath his seat, before fortune finally smiled upon him.

As we sat and talked in the London mansion to which he had retired, I asked him how he endured it.

McCulloch was then an old man, grizzled and bearded, his big hands gnarled and scarred from years of leaving pick and shovel, but he was still straight backed, strong and active.

"How did I stick it?" he said. "Looking back now, I'm hanged if I know. It certainly wasn't because I imagined that I was going to make a the biggest silver deposit the world has ever known, is an epic of courage and sheer persistence that has seldom been equalled. Down to his last shilling, dispirited after a long and seemingly hopeless fight against savage nature, only obstinacy kept George McCulloch at his search for what he thought was lead. But when victory came the "lead" was proved to be silver, a vast deposit from which £150,000,000 worth has since been taken.

persuaded her to give me one last chance and she agreed to wait for a few more days."

McCulloch spent all his savings, down to the last shillings, bringing yet another expert from the city to the barren waste where he had worked so long.

"At first," he said, "he was just as dubious as the others, and as he shook his head over the specimens of ore I had obtained my heart sank."

MAGNIFICENT HOME

"For twenty-four hours he examined the ore. Then he went out with me to my claim and took more specimens—and at last he was satisfied."

"It was not lead, nor yet tin—but silver!"

Thus, romantically, was the greatest silver mine in the world discovered.

George McCulloch, his months of toil at last rewarded, formed a syndicate of seven men. Each put £70 into the mine and within a few years the shares had rocketed to the astounding value of £16,000,000.

McCulloch eventually retired and came to England, where he built a wonderful mansion in Queen's Gate. It was here that he entertained me and, pointing to the priceless collection of paintings that decorated the walls, he told me why he began collecting them.

He possessed what I suppose must have been the finest collection of modern artists in the world.

"Back in the old days," he said, "I used to brighten up the walls of my shack with reproductions of famous paintings cut from old magazines, and I made a vow then that if ever I became rich I would spend all I could on encouraging art because of the pleasure those pictures gave me."

McCulloch spent hundreds of thousands on his home. Marble was especially imported from Pompeii, the fireplaces where McCulloch had picked up his specimens, declared that he had discovered tin there.

He picked it up, examined it closely and tucked it away in his pocket.

"I thought it might be tin," he told me, "but when I sent it to Melbourne for an analyst's report I was told that it was only lead and of indifferent quality at that."

For two years he forgot about his find. Then one day, in conversation with an old prospector, he was reminded of it. The old man, describing the exact spot where McCulloch had picked up his specimen, declared that he had discovered tin there.

McCulloch laughed at him. "I made the same mistake two years ago," he said. "It's not tin, it's lead and not worth mining at that."

But the old prospector refused to agree.

"There's tin there," he repeated, "and I'm making a claim."

Impressed by this show of faith, McCulloch decided to work there, too, but after months of back-breaking toil, with the temperature constantly hovering between 110 and 115 in the shade, they had discovered neither tin nor lead.

In disgust the old man gave up his claim and returned to Melbourne, but, as McCulloch told me, a streak of sheer obstinacy in his character made him keep on digging.

VERY PERSISTENT

He no longer believed that anything was there, but because his wife nagged him and the few other men on the shack farm told him he was a fool, he refused to give up.

Each night when he came home tired and dispirited, his rough mining clothes soaked with sweat, Mrs. McCulloch would beg him to give up his vain search and move back to civilisation.

And who could blame her? The only white woman for miles, she led a lonely existence, made almost intolerable by the dreadful heat and other hardships.

At last in desperation she packed her trunk and told him that if he remained there any longer he would stay alone. She sick of the sight of dust and flies and the eternal glare, was determined to leave.

"I argued with her," the old millionaire told me, "but it was plain that her mind was made up. In the end I

How Doctors Treat Indigestion

By Dr. F. B. Scott, M.D., Paris.

Although doctors are human, you rarely find them suffering from indigestion. The reason is that they know exactly what causes it and how to treat it. Personally, I know nothing to equal "Bisulcated Magnesia" as a speedy and sure remedy for all digestive troubles. If I eat anything that disagrees with me I take either a teaspoonful of the powder or four of the tablets, and there is an end of the trouble. Indeed, there is something almost miraculous about the speed with which "Bisulcated Magnesia" arrests acute stomach pain. "Bisulcated Magnesia" (powder or tablets) can be had at any chemist at 1/- and 2/- a bottle; there is also a 6d. trial tin of tablets. I advise every sufferer to take some after their next meal; the relief will be a revelation. —Advt.

How to treat your wife

Men have a way of keeping a good thing to themselves. For instance, sir, how often have you thought of treating your wife to a Guinness? Why shouldn't she enjoy that incomparable flavour as much as you do? Don't let her think that because Guinness is dark it must be heavy. Stand her a Guinness and she'll soon realise how clean and refreshing is the taste of a Guinness.

"Guinness is good for you"—that's as true for women as is for men. Many doctors have written to say that they regard a Guinness a day as a tonic of the utmost value to women. It makes their work lighter and their day brighter. Treat yourself and your wife to a Guinness at dinner.

Order half-a-dozen Guinness for the home.

The PERFECT CRIME—Almost!

By Ex-Chief Inspector WILLIAM GOUGH

THE distinguished-looking old gentleman who walked into a Sunderland bank approached the cashier and, after politely waiting his turn, asked if he might see the manager.

"Certainly, sir," said the cashier. "What name shall I say?"

"Mr Alfred Rowan," was the reply. "You might tell the manager I have been recommended by business friends in London."

Mr. Rowan was undoubtedly a person of some distinction. He wore one of the old-fashioned Imperial beards made popular many years previously by Napoleon III, and he was so suave and polished in his conversation that he might have been a Frenchman himself.

This was readily explainable; he chartered English ships for the French trade and naturally spent a great deal of his time in Paris. His account, he said apologetically to Mr. Ford, the manager, would not be a large one—a matter of £500, which he would be spending during his stay in the North.

Everybody in the bank was charmed with Mr. Rowan. Into the somewhat grimy, commercial atmosphere of workaday Sunderland he brought a whiff of the Paris boulevards and a world unknown to the clerks of a small bank.

Young Ford, the manager's son, was fascinated by this cosmopolitan client and one must admit that Mr. Rowan, for his part, went out of his way to be agreeable to the boy.

Tea for Four

The acquaintance ripened rapidly. On going into the Empress Hotel for his tea one afternoon shortly afterwards, whom should the boy encounter but Mr. Rowan and two friends of his from London. Mr. Rowan greeted him with great geniality, introduced him to his two companions—a Mr. Armitage and a Mr. Turner.

All four had tea together. The young fellow felt flattered to be in the company of such important men, whose conversation was mainly about deals running into many thousands of pounds.

When he took his departure, he was invited to call in at the Empress any time; they would always be glad to entertain him. So far, so good.

Mr. Rowan was in and out of Sunderland for a long time. As his account ran down, so he had it replenished. He chatted freely and familiarly with all the staff, remarked on the fact that the Sunderland folk were embarrassingly friendly and that if he stayed there much longer they would surely break him. A regular ray of sunshine was Mr. Rowan.

He arrived at the bank one morning soon after nine o'clock and wondered whether they would mind cashing a cheque for him before hours. Only for £20, and to oblige someone who was going to London.

The cashier said, "With pleasure, Mr. Rowan," and a pleasure it was to oblige such an affable old fellow. But being before opening hours, of course, the money had to be obtained from the strong-room, and Mr. Rowan, half-laughing, insisted on seeing it go to London.

The cashier said, "With pleasure, Mr. Rowan," and a pleasure it was to oblige such an affable old fellow. But being before opening hours, of course, the money had to be obtained from the strong-room, and Mr. Rowan, half-laughing, insisted on seeing it go to London.

Then he learned that the gold he wanted was kept in the bullion safe, and while that was being unlocked, he remarked that it was a cold morning and that he might just as well warm his hands at the office fire while they were getting his money.

Later, with a grateful "Good morning," he went out, and there was not a soul in the bank that did not feel the better for his visit—even at so early an hour.

Now we may as well have the mask removed from Mr. Rowan's smiling face at this stage and disclose him in his true colours—double-dyed old villain with a record of crime so black that it could not be dyed any deeper.

Alfred, indeed, was a high-class bank robber—the sort they don't breed in these decadent times.

Not one of the strong-arm thugs: oh, dear, no. Subtlety, suavity and secrecy were the weapons he liked.

Nor did Alfred actually appear on the scene once his plans were completed. His understrappers did this—the self-same Messrs. Armitage and Turner already mentioned.

As a result of the simple little ruse of getting a cheque cashed before hours, he knew exactly where the £20 was kept.

The all-important problem confronting him was to obtain possession of the bank keys, only temporarily—just long enough to make wax impressions of them.

Either Mr. Turner or Mr. Armitage could do this; they were not inexperienced.

They played on and the marker was sent for drinks. Mr. Armitage, admitted a gentleman of some dexterity, took advantage of the marker's absence to search young Ford's pockets once more. He found what he wanted this time and with commendable speed adjourned to a place where, with a convenient piece of wax, he took impressions of all the keys.

Unnoticed, he returned them to the pocket of their proper owner and the game proceeded apace.

Mr. Rowan was fully aware from what he had seen when he cashed his early morning cheque that the key of the bullion safe was kept by Mr. Kaines, the cashier—a slightly tougher nut to crack.

As ways and means to obtaining this particular key, Mr. Rowan sought to take up his residence in the house where the cashier had rooms.

However, the landlady lacked accommodation, and so Mr. Rowan had to dilate long and earnestly on the beneficial effect a Turkish bath would have on Mr. Kaines.

Ultimately he had his way, and when the two reached there, Mr. Rowan, as an additional treat, advised a shampoo. This, of course, was a process calling for the undivided attention of the unconscious victim.

He had it. Mr. Rowan not only spent his money liberally, but also suggested that the young man might like to try the novelty of a Turkish bath.

There was quite a good one in Newcastle, and as he remarked, he had to do something to counteract the embouchure which was afflicting his old age.

They made their way, then, to a place which dispensed Turkish baths, and in the steaming hot atmosphere peeled off their clothes and deposited their bodies in one room after another. The heat grew stronger and the air grew thicker as they made their pilgrim's progress.

Misty figures clad in turbans and white robes flitted around everywhere—all in keeping with the Turkish atmosphere. Young Ford didn't find the experience too enjoyable, but he stuck it like a Briton and never complained.

He did not take much notice of the attendants which was just as well, for among them, strangely clad in turban and burnouse, was Mr. Armitage.

Nor would he have felt any easier in his mind had he seen what Mr. Armitage was really doing in this Oriental disguise—rifling the pockets of the youthful bank clerk.

Secrets of a Private Detective

IT is a well-known maxim that at the crooked game you cannot win. But this week ex-Chief Inspector William Gough, recounting here his experiences as a Scotland Yard officer and as a private detective, tells of three clever rogues who thought they had devised the Perfect Crime. In a sense they had, and it seemed almost a shame to take the money. But for all their cleverness, one at least was caught in the toils of the law and finally convicted out of his own mouth.

Mr. Rowan had closed his account at the bank some week or two before the robbery, and in the midst of the hubbub that burst on the unfortunate staff when the robbery was discovered the following morning, no one even thought that he might be the nigger in the woodpile.

As the local police combed Sunderland for evidence, they came across only one person who could provide a clue—the nocturnal stroller who had met a couple of men coming from the direction of the bank. But, as he told the detectives, he had no reason to suspect them. They were walking along in leisurely fashion and it was not until the following day, when the news of the robbery spread, that he attached any suspicion to them.

For the time being, then, complete mystery prevailed. One thing was certain: some of the plunder must have been taken abroad. A good many of the missing notes came back from Paris banks, without, however, the Sûreté being able to trace them.

Paris, of course, at all times, is a haven of refuge for English crooks. It abounds with money-changers, and plenty of them, as I have frequently discovered, ask no awkward questions if there is a good profit in the offing.

As a result of the simple little ruse of getting a cheque cashed before hours, he knew exactly where the £20 was kept.

The all-important problem confronting him was to obtain possession of the bank keys, only temporarily—just long enough to make wax impressions of them.

Unnoticed, he returned them to the pocket of their proper owner and the game proceeded apace.

Mr. Rowan was fully aware from what he had seen when he cashed his early morning cheque that the key of the bullion safe was kept by Mr. Kaines, the cashier—a slightly tougher nut to crack.

As ways and means to obtaining this particular key, Mr. Rowan sought to take up his residence in the house where the cashier had rooms.

However, the landlady lacked accommodation, and so Mr. Rowan had to dilate long and earnestly on the beneficial effect a Turkish bath would have on Mr. Kaines.

Ultimately he had his way, and when the two reached there, Mr. Rowan, as an additional treat, advised a shampoo. This, of course, was a process calling for the undivided attention of the unconscious victim.

He had it. Mr. Rowan not only spent his money liberally, but also suggested that the young man might like to try the novelty of a Turkish bath.

There was quite a good one in Newcastle, and as he remarked, he had to do something to counteract the embouchure which was afflicting his old age.

They made their way, then, to a place which dispensed Turkish baths, and in the steaming hot atmosphere peeled off their clothes and deposited their bodies in one room after another. The heat grew stronger and the air grew thicker as they made their pilgrim's progress.

Misty figures clad in turbans and white robes flitted around everywhere—all in keeping with the Turkish atmosphere. Young Ford didn't find the experience too enjoyable, but he stuck it like a Briton and never complained.

He did not take much notice of the attendants which was just as well, for among them, strangely clad in turban and burnouse, was Mr. Armitage.

Nor would he have felt any easier in his mind had he seen what Mr. Armitage was really doing in this Oriental disguise—rifling the pockets of the youthful bank clerk.

Open Sesame

He had left all his bank keys, except that of the bullion safe, in the office of the hotel where the baths were situated.

The bullion key he kept in his clothes.

Mr. Armitage was still in evidence, though unrecognisable as before. As Mr. Kaines was being lathered, his friend, Rowan, stood by watching the operation and chatting. Meanwhile, the ubiquitous Armitage ran through the cashier's pockets and, finding what he wanted, did the necessary.

Unsuspecting the cashier went back to Sunderland.

Four and a half months had gone by since all this had begun, a long time for even the cleverest of criminals to wait. Still, it was worth while; very few robbers could boast that the contents of a bank were theirs almost for the asking.

On a dark winter's night in March, when the bitter breezes from the North Sea were whistling through the streets of Sunderland, Messrs. Armitage and Turner—Mr. Rowan was discredibly keeping watch for the police—met on the seat—opened the front door of the Sunderland Bank, saying to themselves no doubt: "It's a shame to take the money."

However, the overcame their remorse and got to work on the bullion safe, which yielded up £27,000-odd. Cheques, silver and copper were thrust aside as of no consequence.

It was still winter-time and the ever-present Mr. Armitage shivering said it would be cold work. So he piled up a roaring big fire, one that made the room almost as hot as the Turkish baths in Newcastle.

Mr. Rowan thought he had better take his coat off and courteously suggested his opponent should do the same.

It was the next move in the game that took place in the billiards room of Mr. Rowan's hotel. What more natural than a hundred and twenty thousand pounds to be won?

With the notes and gold they felt highly satisfied, and as they left with the plunder in a black brief bag they agreed that the "old man" Rowan was surely a marvel.

Was he not the master mind? Had he not planned a crime that was almost perfect? If his two confederates were so foolish as to court capture, they must bear the consequences.

Gay Frocks for Summer

By BETTY BLUE

HEAT waves may come and go, but Fashion has decreed "hot-making" colours for this summer. Vivid lacquer red, "intense" pink, gold and all the brightest shades of the yellow group.

Floral prints show all the brilliant colours of the flower border, intensified.

Patterns are either startlingly large, or small and niggling. Giant flowers glow on white backgrounds, while navy and black crepes are almost covered by tiny all-over patterns. You choose whichever extreme suits you, the large for the slims, the small patterns for the not-so-slims.

Lovely day and evening frocks are being made with 60 in. floral squares. These have huge flower designs, and two or three squares make the cleverly draped frock.

Brown—not usually a summer colour—is well to the fore. There is a lovely shade called "mordore," and another "mulberry."

NEW COLOUR SHADeS

Green are on the dark side. Cypress, a favourite, is worn with a bright colour contrast. The new glacier green is neither blue, green, nor grey, but something of all three. For you, blondes!

Those cyclamens and mauves we have worn so happily will still be with us. But they have gone dusty in shade. So have all the other pastel colours, which are no longer clear.

The frock photographed here is in parma violet crepe. Notice the handsome Greek trimming in "lampwick" braid.

Silver grey and platinum are also among the cooler colours. Charming for matrons.

White always returns with summer time. Broderie Anglaise (an Edwardian revival), flowered, spotted and checked organdies, laces and ninons make a blouse a dainty affair.

In Paris, women are wearing crisp, white organdie jabots, cuffs and waistcoats with their black tailored suits; and pleated frillings on the necks of washing frocks.

White frocks have two strongly contrasted colours for sash, belt and neckline. You will see a great deal of pleating in the summer frocks. Tiresome to keep trim and in order, maybe, but how smart!

EX-KING IS NOW COUNTRY SQUIRE

He's Made Up His Mind To Love This Gal!

Norwalk, Connecticut, Saturday.

ARTHUR CASPER HAS JUST CHOSEN A YEAR'S IMPRISONMENT AND OF LILY PONS, THE OPERATIC SOPRANO.

He was arrested when he broke into Miss Pons's home near Norwalk, Connecticut. The judge told him he could go free if he would leave this part of the country and stop bothering Miss Pons. Otherwise he would go to prison and pay a fine.

"This is a big decision for me," said Casper when he chose imprisonment. "I've been disappointed in love before, and I'm not going to be baited now."

Casper arrived from his home in California by omnibus and taxi, and entered Miss Pons's home at midnight by an unlocked side door. He announced to the singer's startled mother, "I'm here to see Lily."

Miss Pons whispered to a maid who telephoned for the police while she entertained Casper with coffee in the kitchen.

Casper refuses to believe that Miss Pons has no intention of seeing him. "I want to hear that from her own lips," he said. "I've come 3,000 miles to see her, and I'm going to." —B.U.P.

THERE'S FOOD FOR THOUGHT IN THIS

UNEMPLOYED MINERS IN TONYPANDY, GLAM., GO TO CHURCH FOR LUNCH SINCE THE REV. CYRIL GWYTHER, OF THE CENTRAL METHODIST CHURCH, ORGANIZED HOT LUNCHES AT TWOPENCE EACH.

Inside the chapel out-of-work men toast their work in milk cocktails.

More than 140 men take advantage of his church kitchen, and in return have renovated the building at a cost of less than £50, whereas it would have been ten times this amount if done by contract.

One unemployed miner has repaid Mr. Gwyther by constructing a small prayer chapel inside the main building.

LILY PONS

AND HE'S HAPPY IN HIS EXILE!

FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT

Biddenden, Kent, Saturday.

IN THIS OLD-WORLD RETREAT A KING HAS FOUND SERENITY AND HAPPINESS IN THE LIFE OF A COUNTRY SQUIRE. HE IS EX-KING PRAJADHIPOK OF SIAM, KEEPER OF THE TWENTY-FOUR UMBRELLAS, BROTHER OF THE MOON AND DESCENDANT OF THE GREAT GOD BUDDHA.

Once he was surrounded by pomp and every kind of luxury. He ruled 14,000,000 subjects from his throne in Bangkok.

Yet when I called at his Elizabethan mansion here was to find the dapper, smiling little squire mowing his own lawn.

This self-exiled monarch finds little to choose between being a great ruler and a plain country gentleman. He describes himself as being "just as happy" in one role as in the other.

Pursuing pleasure and power may be all right for others, but His Highness does not care for himself. He misses nothing of his old life and has found true satisfaction in the new.

A keen follower of Buddha, he believes that in the storms of life the "barque of the tranquil soul" sails free.

He conducted me into his library, rich in old oak and blackened beams, in priceless carvings and bric-a-brac, in treasures and swords inlaid with gold.

An illuminated verse stood on a cabinet in a plain wooden frame, a poem which, in a sense, sums up his philosophy of life.

Scanning the lines quickly, I found they read something like this:

"Give me a nook and a book,
And let the proud world spin round.
Let it scramble by hook or crook,
For I am here to have a good sound.
Give me my book and pipe,
Free from the clatter and strife;
Give me the staff and crook,
The calm and sweetness of life.
From the world let me reign in my nook."

King of this Kingdom, my book
A realm by fashion forsook.
A man of man, a man for story
Nor mar the sweet tune of my story."

And in this quiet existence here, the squire has probably found the best life for man.

Peace comes to him as he strolls by his shaded lily pond with Sam, his Airedale, or round his lovely garden, sweet with the scent of flowers. Cycling along leafy lanes, fresh with the magic of spring, he finds happiness, too.

He prefers these quiet pleasures to the gayer whirl of London, to which the powerful cars in his garage could transport him in an instant.

His Highness enjoys a fast game of tennis, too, and, until a recent operation for cataract, was a keen player.

He is loved for his generosity and kindness in the village. He buys from the local stores, and has made gifts of silver cups to fetes, shows, gymkhanas, and football leagues.

But he likes nothing better than slipping down to Caledonian Market once a week, mixing with the crowd unnoticed, and buying paintings, porcelain, bowls, and vases.

The ex-King of Siam
His only regret is that he cannot go and see his own country again.

It was in 1935 that the ex-King abdicated in favour of King Amara, his thirteen-years-old nephew.

"Now if I go back," he declares, "it would only cause trouble."

MORE THAN FIFTY-FOUR YEARS AGO, WHEN "MUM AND GOV." SANK THEIR SAVINGS IN A MARRIAGE LICENCE AND WERE LEFT WITH 1s. 8d. IN THEIR POCKETS, THEY WERE SIXTEEN AND VERY MUCH IN LOVE.

"Mum" and "Gov." have pooled their resources again, and the result will be the erection of a super palace of vaudeville—the Tower Bridge Empire—at a cost of £100,000.

"Mum" is Cockney Queen Kate Carney, who for half a century has flaunted her pearls and ostrich feathers, and sang "Knees Up, Mother Brown" to millions of delighted music-hall fans.

And "Gov."? Why, he's George Barclay, the clog-dancer who rose to be the King of Variety Agents, and discovered a whole firmament of stars from Hackenschmidt to Nellie Wallace.

The latest venture of the pair will be built on a site at the corner of Tower Bridge and the Old and New Kent roads. It will have a magnificent proscenium, super bars, revolving stages, and seating accommodation for 1,850 people.

"Courage?" says George and Kate in one breath. "It does not take courage to save your savings in something you believe in."

"Crisis, pshaw! There won't be a war. As for super-cinemas, we're not afraid of competition from them."

Two Minutes With The Great Genius of Anthony Trollope

WHAT a rumpus there was in the room of Colonel Maberly, Secretary to the General Post Office, in London, on the day a letter containing banknotes disappeared from the desk.

They didn't sack that boy. But, indeed, it probably wouldn't have mattered much to him if they had.

For Anthony Trollope, the youthful participant in that little drama, had so much manhood and courage in his make-up that he would climb to success despite such a set-back.

They sent for the young clerk who had placed the letter on the desk. He came, looking puzzled and a little fearful. "The letter has been taken," stormed the Colonel, "a-and, by Heaven, there's been nobody in this room but you and I!"

So saying, he banged his fist down upon the desk.

"Then," shouted the clerk, his eyes blazing with indignation, "by Heaven, you have taken it!"

He uttered those astonishing words, the lad thundered his fist down upon a little table on which there stood a bottle full of ink. The ink splashed up, covering the Colonel's face and shirt front. And in that instant the Colonel's private secretary arrived, with the letter and the money.

A N ENGLISHWOMAN'S MASQUERADE AS A MAN FOR 51 YEARS HAS JUST BEEN REVEALED IN SYDNEY BY HER APPLICATION TO ENTER A HOME FOR INDIGENT OLD PEOPLE.

Without revealing her name, the authorities say the woman told the following astounding story.

She arrived from England in the "eighties" when she was thirteen years old. She adopted male attire to secure employment.

When she was thirty she went through a marriage ceremony with a woman friend. "The wife" died recently. After working hard for many years, the "man-woman" rose to an important municipal office.

Her masquerade would never have been discovered if she had not fallen upon hard times and been forced to seek refuge in a home.—B.U.P.

THE SHRINE OF THE UNKNOWN WARRIOR IN BERLIN

Men and boys are wanted for the Royal Navy to keep open our trade routes and enable our Merchant Ships safely to bring home the nation's food.

AN APPEAL TO ALL WHO AND THEIR

BECAUSE the shadow of war is darkening the world again; because the nightmare memories haunt us now, waking as well as sleeping; and because this madness need not happen; we must be prepared.

When the last war started, I was working in Paris and I had three friends, one English, like myself, another French and the third German. We were all in our early twenties and deep in the young enchantment of that gay, brave city.

The shadow fell suddenly upon our carelessness. "Enemy subjects" were given twenty-four hours to leave France. Ralph and I saw Rudolph off and there was one Frenchman with us not ashamed to shake a German hand. We never saw Rudolph again. He was killed in the early months: Maurice, the Frenchman, fell at Verdun and Ralph died of wounds on the Western Front a few weeks before the Armistice.

Now, when I pass the Cenotaph, I think of all three men in the same way, and with equal affection. Two of them have no known grave. All three were submerged in the senseless flood of war. There is nothing left of their youth and ardour and willing loyalty except these monuments to the dead and the call to service.

Recently I travelled all along the old Western Front, stared incredulously at the myriad names carved on the Menin Gate and saw the white crosses, row upon endless row, and the darker lines of the German graves. Cemetery after cemetery marks that belt of No Man's Land and the quiet dead are equal in their last sleep.

A. E. Housman wrote an epitaph for them, friend and foe alike, in a verse of four lines only. *Here, dead lie we because we did not choose
To live and shame the land from which we sprung.
Life, to be sure is nothing much to lose;
But young men think it is, and we were young.*

Pride in Service

YOU CAN HELP by good comradeship with every other willing worker, regardless of political or social differences.

YOU CAN HELP, if age and occupation permit, by enrolling in the Territorial Army or in the Auxiliary A.R.P. Services. Men and women are equally needed for fire fighting, nursing, land work and ambulance services described in the National Service handbook. Older men are wanted for the Balloon Barrage and the R.A.M.C.

YOU CAN HELP, if you have a large basement or garden, by having air-raid shelters made for neighbours not provided with them, and a Government grant can be asked for this purpose.

YOU CAN HELP, if you live in a safety zone, by finding out what accommodation can be offered for people—other than school children—who would be better evacuated from big towns. And you can make provisional arrangements to house your own friends and relatives of this kind if you have room for them.

YOU CAN HELP to prevent food shortage by laying in a fortnight's supply of food for your own family and encouraging others to take the same precautions.

Many of us are no longer young, but they "grow not old as we who are left grow old." If we fail them now; if we deny them the one gain that might have been worth their sacrifice; there will be no comfort left for us in memories nor any purpose in the tedious years.

If we permit another war to break out, the women and the children and the old folk in great cities and little towns will be no safer than the poor harmless people of Aire-sur-la-Lys, who lived then but a little way behind the line.

But it is not too late to avert this horror and madness. We must be strong to deter the

Many more women ambulance drivers are still needed, as well as women for various Nursing Services, and to help supervise the evacuation of children and old people from the towns.

LOVE THEIR COUNTRY FELLOW MEN gamblers in human lives. The responsibility is individual and inescapable, for the strength of the nation for peace is in our hands and in the sum of our own service.

It may not be our fault that "the war to end war" has brought us back again after more than twenty years to the brink of the same abyss, but it will be our fault if we cheapen the risk of aggression and encourage reckless ambitions by the spectacle of our own unpreparedness.

Thousands of young men are wanted for training in the R.A.F. and thousands more already skilled in certain trades are needed to make and maintain the planes.

We know, just as all the world knows, that nobody in this country wants war. Indeed, we desire peace so earnestly that we are prepared for great sacrifices to maintain it. We are re-arming now because there is no other way to convince all men in high places that war would be and must be a losing gamble. We can save peace by making the price of breaking it too high.

MAKE THIS AN ENDURING PEACE

This is no time for divided loyalties or vain recriminations. Statesmen are but human. They mean well, but they sometimes blunder. They have often blundered since the last war.

But can we be sure that we should have done any better had we been in their place? We voted them into office and it is easy to be wise after the event. Besides, what does it matter now who made the first blunders or when? To-day—and it is only to-day that counts—we know that Britain's increased strength in a declared and open purpose is encouraging peace lovers in every country. They look to us for a lead; their strength grows with our own. We dare not relax our efforts.

There is work for all to do. Youth is in uniform once more. The children of the last war are ready to serve as their fathers served before them and the veterans of 1914 are prepared to serve again. But in all hearts there is the hope to serve for peace.

Your private politics don't matter; your personal grievances are of no importance. Forget these things. Do not judge your neighbours or wait for them. The call to serve comes to each man and woman personally. It is urgent. It must be answered—not "some time," not next month, not next week, but NOW.

The suggestions made in these pages may help you to decide what work you are best fitted for. If none of them meets your particular case, use your own initiative and find a job for yourself. But don't be left out. In one way or another, directly or indirectly, all can share in the pride of service, and work together to establish an enduring peace.

The fate of the world and the happiness of all this generation are at stake. You cannot escape your personal responsibility; you must resolve your own doubts, if doubts there be.

This is an appeal for service; it is not intended as a recruiting sergeant's call to arms, nor even as a plea to patriotism in the old and narrow sense of the word, for to serve your country now is to serve the world.

The Cenotaph and the Unknown Warrior's Shrine commemorate the common sacrifice of men who fought for their countries and died in the same hope that there should be no more war.

There need be no more war, but peace cannot be won by mere words and pious aspirations. Faith without works is dead.

H. Kingsley Long

The R.A.F. also requires women for many different duties as well as for training as pilots in the Civil Air Guard.

How You Can Help

YOU CAN HELP, if you are an ex-service man, by rallying old comrades to service again and by encouraging young men to join up where most needed.

YOU CAN HELP, if you are a "parson," by using your opportunities to inspire your fellow men and women to take part in National Defence Services.

YOU CAN HELP, if you are an employer, by making immediate A.R.P. plans for all your staff while at work and urging them to provide for their own safety at home.

YOU CAN HELP, if you are an employer, by encouraging your men and women workers to join those National Defence Services for which each is best fitted and by giving generous treatment to all who do.

The cost of this announcement has been borne by a non-party, non-political group of ex-Servicemen animated by the spirit of the Unknown Warrior and anxious to encourage others to give practical support at this time of grave national emergency.

Knuckle-Fighter Recalls Battle-

THAT LASTED 82 ROUNDS!

HE ENVIES MODERN BOXERS

SPECIAL TO "THE PEOPLE"

ARTHUR CALLAN, BATTERED OLD PUG OF SEVENTY-TWO, WALKED INTO "THE PEOPLE" OFFICES YESTERDAY, CAZED AT HIS CALLOUSED FISTS, AND RECALLED VIVID MEMORIES OF THE FIERCEST BARE-KNUCKLE CONTEST IN HISTORY.

To-day, the father of nine children, he envies modern boxers who climb into the ring and battle for a purse of thousands.

For, in his prime, Callan never got more than £50 for fight, and that at the expense of split lips, smashed ribs, and bruises, received from gladiators, many of whom never lifted their mitts again.

* Also supplied in Full W's. Price 29/- 1/- 4/- with Order (postage 1/-) and 4/- monthly.

In imagination this great old English bruiser was in the ring again. He saw himself as he was nearly fifty years ago, stripped to the waist, a pair of white knickers caught round his middle by a blue bird's eye goe.

His twisted face split in a grin as he conjured up a picture of himself, head cocked like a parrot, small grey eyes weighing up his opponent, Jack Gover, a doughty fighter with hard, lean muscles and a bulldog jaw.

SECOND MEETING

These two had met before and fought each other to a standstill after 65 ding-dong rounds.

And here is the pen-picture Callan drew for me of that horrific battle, lasting over 82 rounds:—

They square off in the grounds of Plantation King Max Lebady's mansion at Maison Lafitte, near Paris.

Lebady has sponsored this match for a purse of 100 sovereigns, and sports have been drawn to the contest from all over Europe.

Round the roped square are millionaires, noblemen and gamblers from Paris. There is the chink of gold and glasses as healths are drunk, wagers laid.

The fight has begun. No sparing for an opening here. For the boxers stand toe to toe, their arms moving like pistons, as they batter away at each other.

First blood to Callan with a smashing right, but Gover lands one in the middle that makes his opponent gasp in pain.

Gover is the more powerful man, but Callan the more cunning. Time after time in the clinches Callan straddles his legs round his knock-kneed adversary, and throws him heavily to the ground.

At the end of an hour they have reached Round 24. Gover's moments are sluggish, as a result of the falls he has taken, but Callan's left fist is practically useless.

Then comes the rain. The onlookers raise their umbrellas, but the fight goes on.

Chests of both men are heaving. They breathe in short, quick gasps. They slip, flounder and flop on the mud-churned earth. But neither fighter gives in.

In the 55th round Gover's hands are swollen; Callan's lips are bruised and bleeding; and his mouth is bounded out of shape.

GAME TO THE END By the end of the 79th round the fight is bad. The onlookers tire of watching what has become an exhibition of endurance. They want to call it a draw.

It is the 82nd round. Both men are in a trance-like state, unable to lift their arms further than their waists, but they are still gamely on their feet.

The fight is declared even; the purse is shared; and Callan spends a fortnight in hospital.

"Aye," said Callan, rubbing his iron jaw, "I can feel some of Gover's punches yet, and he was in a worse state than I was."

Gover claims that he fought every light-weight champion of England in his time, and put many of them out of action for keeps.

"There were no cups, no belts, no bouquets for us then," he explained.

"When I was a missionary I had plenty of experience of camping out."

Snow White Breaks The Record!

Hollywood, Saturday.

"SNOW WHITE AND THE SEVEN DWARFS" HAS MADE MORE MONEY THAN ANY OTHER FILM IN THE HISTORY OF THE KINEMA. WALT DISNEY'S STUDIO REVEALS THAT SINCE THE FULL-LENGTH PICTURE WAS RELEASED, IT HAS MADE APPROXIMATELY £1,348,000.

This figure exceeds by £348,000 the former record established in 1928 by "The Singing Fool," one of the first all-talkies.

"Snow White" has just been withdrawn from circulation in the United States. It is, however, still playing in many foreign countries, where theatre receipts will probably add another £400,000 to the picture's record.—Reuter.

Explorer's Choice: JUNGLE FOR SAFETY!

SPECIAL TO "THE PEOPLE"

AFTER THIRTY YEARS OF HAIRBREADTH ESCAPES IN DESERT AND JUNGLE, ARTHUR L. FISHER THINKS THE WILDS AS SAFE AS THE STREETS OF LONDON: "PERHAPS SAFER," HE SAYS, "WITH ALL THIS TRAFFIC ABOUT."

Still, when I heard some of his exploits yesterday, I decided to leave the freedom of the wilds to explorer-photographer Fisher, who has just come from equatorial Africa.

After all, one is not peppered with poisoned darts in Pidzitz or charged by rogue elephants in Pall Mall!

The bespectacled, and aged fifty-two, Mr. Fisher told me a few of the high-spots of his life of adventure.

"There was the time our raft crashed as we floated swiftly down the Amazon. We were washed up on a veritable curtain. I only just managed to reach the shore."

"Five out of the ten others on the raft were drowned. For ten days we tramped through the jungle with nothing to eat but a few roots. Then, just as we were on our last legs, we stumbled on a native village and were saved."

"Then there was the time we took a pack of dogs into the Sahara to teach them to hunt desert lion, jackal and hyena."

"We lost our bearings and, for days, wandered round and round with only a pint of water to drink and not a thing to eat."

"When their tongues were swollen with thirst so that they could hardly speak, the party came upon a wandering tribe of Bedouins and were saved."

"There was the time, too, that we lost many members of our party during an expedition on the upper reaches of the Amazon." Mr. Fisher continued.

"Without a word of warning, men would stumble and fall to the ground, wounded by poison darts."

"Although we were well armed we could do little to protect ourselves so quickly and silently did our attackers take their leave."

"The jungle has gone all civilised nowadays," Mr. Fisher went on. "In Africa, native chiefs own refrigerators and enjoy iced drinks."

Read what Professor Pollard says about

DANDRUFF

Professor Pollard, the great dermatologist of Graz University, has made a special study of dandruff, falling hair and baldness, and he says "Dandruff is the first sign that the hair roots are being starved and the scalp dried out. Unless checked, this condition eventually leads to baldness. For such cases I prescribe Silvikrin — because it is the natural food the hair must have."

The time of experiments and unscientific remedies for dandruff and baldness is over. The results of such brilliant scientists as the great bio-chemist Dr. Weidner and Professor Zuntz have shown that no man or woman need ever lose his or her hair.

DANDRUFF, falling hair, baldness, are due to the blood stream failing to supply the hair root with the fourteen separate organic elements which they must have to grow healthy hair. This great discovery was made by that brilliant bio-chemist Dr. Weidner. Dr. Weidner saw that the only way to cure these conditions would be to feed the starved hair roots with Silvikrin, which contains these fourteen organic elements in Nature's exact proportions. That is why Silvikrin has had such amazing success in clearing up dandruff, stopping falling hair and growing new hair.

What is your hair trouble? Look below. Get your Silvikrin and start the treatment to-day!

DANDRUFF WAS KILLING THIS MAN'S HAIR!

Read this enthusiastic letter from a man who had severe dandruff and was losing his hair:

30 Russell Court, London, W.C.1.

Dear Sirs,

For some years I suffered with falling hair and dandruff. Nothing I tried did any good, and I was in despair, when a specialist recommended Silvikrin. One bottle banished the dandruff. I need not say my hair stopped falling. My photograph will show you how thin my hair is to-day thanks to Silvikrin.

Calling All Cars—

Here There and ANY Old Where

Auntie Wasn't The Worst

IT seems that Auntie Nellie wasn't the only sensation at the opera which I mentioned to you last week.

Auntie's dress was certainly leaning towards the noisy, but it was new! Which isn't all you could say for some of the old nobility there. For Susie (one of the Gossip Girls) says out pat that some of the Dowagers' raiment might have come from an old clo' dealer in the Ark.

She saw some feather boas round aristocratic necks well on in the mounting season (the boas not the necks), some ermine going mangy and mauve brocade looking tarnished. And there could possibly be more melancholy than mauve brocade which has lost the first (second, third and fourth) blush of youth?

Say what you like about Auntie, she may not click in her romances, she isn't a model of tact or a stickler for fact, but she never wears off-colour mauve brocade. Not on no account.

Or squify ermine. Or bear parting company with their bits and pieces.

Cavemen, Forward

ONE of the London papers which specialises in that sort of thing, has been checking up on the voltage of its girl readers for cavemen. And the girls all disagree, bless their silly hats.

For instance, Gladys (none of the names is real) is all for a garrulous troglodyte person with knobby shoulders, who would just envelop her in his enormous hairy arms and make her melt away. A great big cave person whom she could marry by the ton, and who would give her (she said all this) healthy children.

None of your spindly speedway fans for Gladys.

But against that, Norah says cavemen are animals, bad-tempered, selfish, unromantic. Might just as well go back to the beginning and live in caves again says Norah.

And Millicent—what has she to say? Avordipus isn't everything—it isn't anything with her. She doesn't marry a man because he is of cave size; you marry a man for his charm, intelligence, table manners. That is, of course, if he asks you.

And Monica wants the whole caboose. She wants a guy with knobby shoulders and good manners, charm and all the rest of it. Brown and tanned, as it were. Of course, Monica is asking for the moon, but, as she says did you ever know a Monica who didn't?

And there was Auntie Nellie. I asked her as well. With tears of gratitude in her deep black wells of eyes, she said that so long as she could get a man who would stay put and not back out on her she wouldn't care what his measurements were.

Poor old Nell. She ought to do better. She doesn't want the earth, yet they don't nibble as they should.

Are Your Table Manners Good?

By WILHELMINA WOOD (The Etiquette Sister)

QUESTION: If I have to attract a waiter's attention, is it considered permissible to tap on a glass with a spoon?

ANSWER: Good swivings, no, lovely. The proper procedure would be to wrench a place out of your roll, and then tap it at him, shouting at the same time, "Get Busy, Sucker!"

QUESTION: If I am out to dinner at a friend's house and my new shoes start to pinch, should I take them off before the soup, or after, and should I leave them on the floor under the table?

ANSWER: No. If you leave them under the table (by the bye, remove them before the soup) you may easily forget and go home without them. The proper thing to do would be to tie them together by the laces and hang them over the back of your chair or round your neck as in paddling.

Speedway's Funny Men

FUNNY game, speedway racing. Last year, because good Australian riders were getting fewer and fewer, there was a long debate about dropping the five "Test matches" and they tried out a lot of comic alternative "Tests," like the Polynesian Islands v. Canada, Costa Rica and Chichester, in their endeavour to find something duller, if possible, than league and cup matches.

But (and this may come humorous to you), although still more riders have retired and Australia is weaker than ever and no match for England, the controllers have fixed six "Test" matches this year.

ENGLAND'S GREAT RECOVERY

EQUALISER BY HALL SEVEN MINUTES FROM TIME

ITALIANS TAKE THE LEAD IN THE SECOND HALF

BEFORE A HYSTERICALLY EXCITED CROWD THE MUCH-VAUNTED INTERNATIONAL FOOTBALL MATCH BETWEEN ITALY AND ENGLAND AT THE SAN SIRO STADIUM, MILAN, YESTERDAY, ENDED IN A DRAW AT TWO GOALS EACH.

Those 75,000 Italian fans had something to rave about. So had England. After drawing first blood through a wonder Tom Lawton back-header, following a corner, they were pulled back through an equally brilliant home goal scored by Biavati, 1-1.

Then came the goal that made England "rave." Silvio Piola, ace Italian centre-forward, got the ball and steadied it with his hand—so England alleged—before driving it at close range into the net. Dr. Bauwens, German referee, heeding the English protests, consulted the linesmen—but the goal stood; 1-2, and the crowd lashed itself to a fever of patriotic fervour.

But England were not finished. Seven minutes from time Willie Hall, Spurs' international, equalised. There was no more scoring.

Thus the battle for the "Football Championship of the World" ended in stalemate. No doubt Italy claimed they had done enough in the second half to win when they took the lead. England will contend that the moral victory was theirs.

That disputed goal would have upset a lesser team. Towards the end play got a trifle tough. The move that made the equalising goal came from Stan Matthews.

From the England point of view, Hall and Goulsen, the inside forwards, were the greatest success, but the backs, Male and Hapgood, wavered under the intense Italian pressure of the second half, and younger players might have withstood the home team more effectively.

LAWTON'S NEAT HEADER

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT

ITALY 2
ENGLAND 2
(At Milan.)

Almost continuous rain for the past four nights has done much to good the ground, and the English were as welcome as it was unexpected. On Friday it had seemed impossible for the Italians to have the San Siro stadium ready in time. But gangs of workmen dredged the mud on Friday night and the impossible was delivered.

Although that match was a certain sell-out the organisation left something to be desired. The last minute rush extended even to the players' dressing-rooms, which were not fitted late on Friday. The widened pitch was springy and green, but it was not level by Wembley standards, and the runs back round the area was barely two yards.

Most of the England team spent the greater part of Friday in bed, and only two or three were out, souvenir hunting in the downpour of rain.

Inclusion of Male and Broome in the side caught the Italian Press by surprise, and all the illustrated supplements issued by the newspapers carried photos of Matthews and Goulsen.

The nail porter at my hotel offered me 60 lire—nearly £2—for two tickets, but at no price are they available. Talk about Wembley.

Heavy thunder showers could not damp the enthusiasm of the crowd. There were few English visitors for the game, but young supporters came from the party of 600 Maltese who had made the long journey to cheer on England against their neutrals.

HAPGOOD WINS THE TOSS

Eddie Hapgood, the English captain, beat Meazza in the toss and Italy kicked off. England attacked first after good work by Matthews and Willingham but the Italian pestered Hapgood and the left-half Goulsen, so that when at the other end Hall all but put Lawton through.

The English forwards swept down the left, and Hall put in the first real shot of the match, but just too late. Hall was pulled, but that free kick was cleared by Foni.

Then came a thrill. Biavati appeared to be offside, but was allowed to go on. From his pass Piola missed an open goal from five yards out.

Foni gave away a corner and from the kick Lawton headed a real goal after 20 minutes with a surprise back-head flick which caught the acrobatic Olivieri unaware.

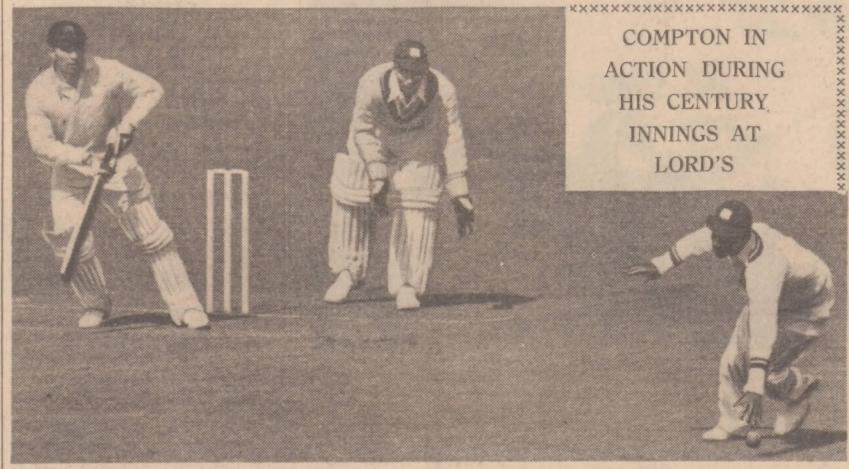

Then Lawton had a grand drive turned round the corner. From the corner kick Hall was just high.

From an Italian free kick Woodley once dropped the ball perilously, but a movement by all our forwards came very near to increasing the lead.

Just before the interval Male was knocked out in a head duel with Causoli.

At the end of the first half England looked well on top of the Italian team, and in just the right mood to be beaten three or four goals ahead.

England, in fact, attacked almost incessantly towards the end of the first half. They were much faster on the ball than the Italians, who seemed to be troubled

ANOTHER 'CLASSIC' KNOCK FROM DENIS COMPTON

IF MUCH OF THE CRICKET PLAYED THIS SUMMER IS AS BRIGHT AS THE PAGE ADDED TO THE ETERNAL SCORE-BOOK BY A BATCH OF THE M.C.C.'S MOST LIVELY BATSMEN AND THE FIELDING OF THE DUSKY ATHLETES FROM THE WEST INDIES, THIS SEASON WILL PROVOKE FEWER YAWNS THAN USUAL.

The star turn definitely was the cat-on-hot-bricks work of Leary Constantine in the gully. The bowling of this famous box-office magnet has fallen off in pace, but he is as quick on his feet and as safe-footed as ever.

Denis Compton's second century of this young campaign was pretty nearly a classic. His fourteen fours included almost every stroke in the book, and some of his off-drives drew mild applause even from the pavilion—is this the hall-mark of excellence. Nevertheless, I thought he was stumped by that swift worker behind the bails, Barrow, at 84 from Hylton.

If these invaders from the colourful Caribbean had not up to the Test standard in most respects, the wicket-keeper looks as good as anybody since Oldfield vanished into the Press box.

The captains were the only amateurs playing and Buckston, who experimented with himself as opening batsman, was beaten by the pace of a fine ball from Gouven.

Gover came in for punishment from Smith and Worthington, who were both strong in driving. Squares, after recent success in the first half, was beaten by early change and Smith used the on-drive with effect.

Worthington showed his best form, but at 72 Gouven, who gave short square leg a low catch, Berry claimed this wicket and then Gregory with a tossed-up blow, accounted for Townsend, who jumped in to drive.

Barrow met with another success, Alderman being bowled. Gregory was unlucky in seeing Worthington escape being run out, but he was up to this by getting Surrey's one really troublesome opponent leg-before.

Worthington hit eight fours during his 100, and his driving and his off-drives and pulls were powerful. With half the side out for 140, Rhodes shaped well in company with George Pope.

The last wicket was added by 42. Rhodes enlivened some quiet cricket by driving and cutting Wattis to the boundary in one over. His off-side strokes were good, and he was caught at cover point of Gouven. Gregory failing to accept an awkward chance.
